The most famous story of Ambrose Bierce, an event at the Gufo Creek Bridge (1890) is a master story that everyone should read. We hope that our study guide will be particularly useful for teachers and students. The story: an event at the Gufo Creek Bridge, character analysis and synthesis, Genre and themes, historical context, quotes, questions of discussion, useful links and notes / teacher Comments Agricoltore during the Warracracter Analysis AnalysisPeyton Farquhar - introduced for the first time to the reader as "a man". Bierce takes his time describing Farquhar who must be hanged by a bridge, explains the clues slowly about Farquhar's identity and status, immediately providing an engaging "gancist" to draw in the reader. Soon, we learn that he is not a soldier and is hanged for crimes against the Union. Later, it is described as a 35-year-old civilian, a southern florist with a beautiful look, devoid of look of a "vulgar killer". Union soldiers - the captain, the first lieutenant and sentinels are accused of running Farquhar on the Gufo Creek bridge. The rest of the company is totally silent, respecting the rules to observe imminent death. Farquhar's wife - although she never appears in history, represents the safety and comfort of home, which Farquhar chose to jeopardize when he tried to sabotage the Union's progress by burning the bridge. At the end of the story, Farquhar has a vision to reunite with her as part of her virtual "white light" escape. Bierce can also believe that his paradise or spiritual resilience. United Scout posing as a Confederate - the spy disguised as a Confederate soldier who informed Farquhar on the Union floor to advance to the Gufo Creek Bridge, and planted the idea that Farquhar burns him to stop them. Plot Summary The story is divided into three sections. In the first section, we learn that a man is about to be hanged by a union captain in the middle of a bridge over ragged water in the north of Alabama, but does not seem like a "vulgar Assassin". We find that the man is Peyton Farquhar, a well-planned southern planter who may have been a captain, or at least sympathetic to the confederation. Just like the soldiers do aside to start his hanged and the fact that Farquhar can only hear the sound of his ticking watch, we pass in the second section, where we get Farquhar's story. Farquhar asked a soldier who seemed to be from the Confederate army of news from the front, and knew that the northern forces repaired the railroads and approached Gufo Creek Bridge to advance their forces. The soldier, who was actually a union soldier under lying spoglie, told Farquhar that any captured civilian would interfere with the efforts of the North would be hanged, and also mentioned how easy it would be to establish the bridge on the fire. In the third and last section, we returned to the scene of the hanging. It seems that Farquhar is awakened by the cold stream of the river, having lost knowledge after the loop broke and fell from the bridge. His executioners are the Firegnerlo from the bridge, undergoes a gunshot wound, approaches the air, plunges under, only to see a cannonball land within two yards. He thinks he's convicted, but then he seems to be expelled from the river on a bank, out of sight and range of shooting. But then he hears the gunshots, escapes through the forest, recovering the announcements to return to his home. He seems to say hello to his wife, but then he feels a sharp blow on his neck, he sees a flashing white light, and everything falls to silence and darkness. The end of the story reveals that Farquhar's broken body is still oscillating on the side of the Gufo Creek Bridge, where he died, after all. A pendulum is deeply symbolic in this storygenrecivil Short Stories Genre,historical in their realistic portrait of real events, soldiers and battles. Since Bierce served at war, coupled his writing skills equipped with his credible and dramatic stories that brought the complexity of war to life for his own- a person must be willing to defend his way of life, culture and family when threatened by an enemy - the question is: at what cost? Security against risk - safety and home (no action, taking on the role of copperhead by refusing to fight) is contrasted abruptly with danger and fighting the enemy (action, implacable watching) time - a constant bierce theme uses throughout history. In both the order of events (we start the story with its suspension, then in the next section learn why it is hung). Time slows more approaching death (in her sticking, Bierce takes a long time to describe every detail to the bridge, but in the second section, all the events that lead to that moment pass quickly.) Time refers to Farquahar's emotions. The pendulum represents the oscillation of the feelings of him from fear, pain, loss, love, from the courage to escape. It is a symbol of time (the pendulums can adjust the watches, such as the Farquhar clock) motion: another predominant bierce theme uses to describe the river, the emotions of Farquhar, and his lack of movement (abundant to be hanged,) and its sudden and fateful motorcycle that falls from the bridge after its neck breaks and died. Finally, the vision of him of the escape of him, swimming and immerse himself in the river dodging gunshots, then moving towards the vision of his wife. Sound: Bierce describes the silence amplifying some sounds (such as the ticking of the Farquhar clock) the river river, while the soldiers, weapons and cannons remain silent. The sound plays a role again in the end: his vision of white light "blame all of him with a sound like the shock of a cannon - then everything is obscurities and silence!" Life after death: the comfort of " White light: "In particular in the face of a certain death, we have the power to view our escape to security (credulità in afterlaths or in the sky, inhaling to the reality of what has happened to our body on earth.) The rules. Define actions: soldiers adhere to army conduct rules to hang an enemy; The rules also prescribe silence in honor of death. Farquahar perceives its duty or rules to defend the Confederation. The TidBall Battery, Fair Oaks, Virginia, 1862 to better understand the historical context of events during the civil war that led to this story, to read the specific battles of the Civil War of Northern Alabama, review the maps and reminiscences of everyday life On a southern plantation during the war. The Franklin-Nashville campaign took place in 1864, guided by General Robert S. Grander (USA) and General John B. Hood (Confederati). American civil war is full of stories of traitorous spies, or civil things caught and hung for their actions against the enemy. Spy in the president of the Civil War Lincoln captured the Lieber code in April 1863, which were instructions for how soldiers should lead themselves in time of war, such as the ethical treatment of populations in occupied terrorists, prisoners of war, and the Liceitis of slave emancipation. In the history of Bierce, federal soldiers are respecting a rigorous code of conduct. Ambrose Biercespega What the following quotes mean and how to refer to history: à ¶The death is a dignitary that when it is announced is to be received with formal manifestations of respect, even by those who know more. À The intellectual part of the nature of him was already suffocated. He had the power only to hear, and the feeling was torment. "Inspail into a bright cloud, of which it was now only the burning heart, without material substance, has crossed unthinkable rocks of oscillation, like a vast pendulum. à ¶ (compare the pendulum to a and a piece of time.)" His whole body has been shaved and striated with an unsustainable anguish! But his disobedient hands gave no attention to the command. "A disturbing splashed within two meters of him was followed by a loud and fast sound, decreasing, which seemed to travel back through the air to the fort and died in an explosion that pushed the river itself to its depths!" "Indubbia, despite hisHe had fallen asleep while walking, for now he sees another scene, perhaps it is simply taken from a delirium. He stands at the door of his house. Everything is as he left it, and everything bright and beautiful in the morning sun. "While going to stop her feeling an incredible hit on the back of the neck; a blinding white light around the incandescence with a sound like the shock of a cannon; then all is darkness and silence!
