I had planned on doing some trigger work on it until I found out that its next to impossible to get the trigger group out. There is one screw that is boxed in. <http://www.tyros-club.de/userfiles/calculating-manual-flash-power.xml>

Im sure there is a small angled screw driver somewhere that will work. Then I talked to Mossberg and they wont sell parts for the trigger group. Will be dumping the Mossberg very soon. I had planned on doing some trigger work on it until I found out that its next to impossible to get the trigger group out. Will be dumping the Mossberg very soon. That being said, I believe the ideal backpacking 22, and a very good truck gun, would be the 702 Plinkster with Tech Sights. Light, accurate, reliable, feeds and shoots everything. It did turn out to be a pretty good little gun, but for the money, could have done better. I cannot recommend it, although I still use mine. One thing that really irks me about the 802 is that it uses a slightly different mag green follower than the 702 red follower and I have three 702s and a box full of mags for them. The difference in the mags is so slight that it is hard to see, but I have tried them and they will not interchange, whereas the Marlin semi boxmag guns and the later boltaction boxmag guns can interchange mags. Same with 1022 and RAR. It is lightweight and handy but accuracy is only mediocre. I got the trigger down to around 3 lbs., which helped. On the positive side, my 802 is very tight and has a very crisp trigger. Its not bad for just a little plinking rifle. I dont see many of the 802s for sale. BTW, the internals of the newer 802s are entirely different from the one in the owners manual. I called Mossberg customer service about this and they essentially said, tough cookies; they just print what they get from Brazil. I have not been impressed with their CS as far as rimfire is concerned; never had any issues with Mossberg center fire guns.
