The water dispersal system ensures rapid, uniform saturation, and the plastic carafe has a spout that automatically opens for pouring and then shuts tightly, combining with the sealed lid to prevent evaporation. Other features include a coffee flow shutoff if the carafe is removed for a quick pour during the brewing cycle; a swingout filter basket that can be removed for cleaning; a flip-top lid on the water tank; and cord storage in the rear. This model comes clad in bright black plastic and carries a one-year warranty against defects. Barker 5.0 out of 5 stars The hinges on the lid of the carafe will break at some point. Can I wait for the entire pot to brew before getting my coffee.

<https://litokolchina.com/images/83620a-manual.pdf>

For me, the questions are answered with a yes, and this pot makes about the best tasting coffee I drink anywhere, even at fine coffee houses. Others have said that the coffee isn't hot enough when it is done brewing but I have never noticed that. Mine is hot enough to burn a tongue if I start to drink right away. Also, I find the entire pot of coffee tastes the best if I wait for the entire pot to brew, so the fact that the interrupt breaks is not a problem to me. I cut it out. I am patient enough to wait the one minute after the brewing is done for the last few drops to stop dripping. If you want to remove the lid from the carafe for whatever reason, it is best to pop it off at the hinges, and not pull the lid. The lid will last a very long time that way. I accept the minor flaws. I bought two before; each lasting over 6 years very good considering I use it at least once a day. The secret was the special lid that trapped steam in the The things that made the KF400 great are almost impossible to find in a single brew appliance today 10 cups, a small footprint, simple design, replaceable parts, no frills, low price, and of course great coffee. I think the So far, I am more pleased with the performance of the Krups 1010, but the flavor was really outstanding with the Braun Aromaster KF400. It may sound trivial to rave so much over a simple object, but if you love coffee as much I do, you can fully appreciate just how great a work of industrial design Dieter Rams classic Braun appliance really was. CR clearly didn't test it for very long. Within 60 days, the basket holding the coffee grounds wouldn't close without lifting the flow control valve that allows you to remove the carafe before brewing was finished. Eventually the valve broke and its obvious why. The valve is a spring loaded arm which pushes a rubber ball into an opening at the bottom of the basket.

<http://www.ligureclub.com/images/8360p-service-manual.pdf>

The arm narrows to a small piece of plastic before it widens into a larger part of the arm that is raised by the carafe to drop the ball and let the coffee drip into the carafe. Over time, the plastic is weakened by the heat of the coffee and the pressure of the spring that forces the ball to close when the carafe is removed. Eventually the arm snaps at its narrowest point. While the coffee tastes great much better than my old Mr. Coffee the basket dribbles coffee over the hot plate when you remove the carafe after it stops brewing. There are 4 prongs that hold the lid on the carafe. They are very small and 3 of the 4 are now broken. It's almost impossible to pour water into the holding tank without spilling it over the side and onto the countertop. I've only had this for 90 days, but it's going into the trash as soon as I get another brand to replace it. We had our Mr. Coffee machine for years and never broke anything on it. The new one is better because 1 The filter holder drains completely. The old one retained some moisture that I needed to hand dry before putting in a new filter. 2 The locking mechanism for the filter holder is more positive you know when it is locked in place. 3 The price of the new model is less than we paid for the older model. I make a pot coffee every morning. The coffee is consistently excellent, and the coffee maker plays a role in that which is why we ordered the similar model when the old one broke. Why did the old one break. I left it on with no water in the carafe for a couple of days. My bad. It had performed well for years, however, so we got our money's worth.
